2. In the event of contested elections for these posts, a secret, written ballot shall be taken among the Board members to decide a result. All members present must cast a valid vote with no abstentions permitted.
3. The business of deciding which Board member shall be elected Chairman shall be conducted by another member of the Board as shall be agreed by the members present.
4. The newly-elected Chairman shall then take the chair and conduct the elections for the remaining positions to be filled. If contested, each position shall be determined by secret, written ballot. All members present must cast a valid vote with no abstentions permitted.
5. Those holding elected positions shall be eligible for re-election during their period of permitted membership of the Board in accordance with Schedule 2 paragraph 12.
6. To become elected to any position, a candidate shall secure an overall majority of votes cast or be subject to an elimination process as below:
 - 6.1 One candidate – elected unopposed
 - 6.2 Two candidates – a simple ballot
 - (a) The candidate obtaining a majority is elected.
 - (b) If voting is equal, the winner will be the retiring office-holder if he is one of the candidates. If neither candidate is the retiring office-holder, the members will cast a second ballot to seek to break the deadlock. If then a majority is secured, that candidate is elected. If there is still a tie the result will be decided by the drawing of lots.
 - 6.3 Three or more candidates – successive preference voting will be used. Each voter will rank the contestants in order of preference: first, second, third etc., on their ballot paper.
 - (a) If one candidate secures an overall majority of first preference votes, he will be declared the winner.
 - (b) If one candidate polls fewer first preference votes than other candidates, he will be eliminated and the second and subsequent preference votes of the remaining candidates will be taken into account. Each of the remaining candidates' first and second preference votes will be aggregated. If there is still no clear majority for one candidate, the candidate polling the fewest of these aggregated votes will be eliminated.
 - (c) The process is repeated subsequently adding the third and successive preference votes with the elimination at each stage of the lowest polling candidate until only two candidates remain in the reckoning. Of the two, the one having the highest aggregated number of first, second etc., preference votes will be declared the winner.
 - (d) If there is a tie on first preference votes, the winner will be the retiring office-holder if he is one of the candidates. If no candidate is the retiring office-holder, the second, third etc., preference votes will be taken into account. Each candidate's first and second preference votes will be aggregated and the candidate with the fewest aggregated votes will be eliminated. Account is then taken of third and subsequent preference votes with further elimination(s) of the lowest polling candidate(s) as above until only two contestants remain as in (c) above.
 - (e) If at any time in the elimination voting procedure a deadlock impasse is reached e.g. with equal aggregated votes over any number of preferences, the result among the remaining candidates will be decided by the drawing of lots.
 - (f) Publication of the results of elections will only record the names of the winner and other candidates, not the voting records.
